Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Antiquary, Vol. 17: A Magazine Devoted to the Study of the Past; January June My earliest archaeological recollections arc associated with the ruined Church of St. Bertin, and the Scytho - Keltic giant - counterpart of the Gog and Magog of Guildhall - called Le bon Dieu de Theroucnne; but preserved in the Cathedral of St. Omer. I also took interest as a boy (for these first reminiscences belong to the epoch of the occupation of Northern France by British troops) in a colony of Flemings, who dwelt apart in a suburb, on a canal (all communication being by boat), and in an extensive marsh, once celebrated for its floating islands, and designated with its ruined monastery as Clair-Marais, or Clear Marsh. As a student at Edinburgh University, excursions were made on foot with Mr. Macadam, of road-making celebrity, to Loch Leven Castle; in a boat with Charles Darwin to the ruined bawns or castles on the islands of the Firth of Forth; to the Bass Rock - the subject of a delightful monograph...
