The first is that what our distinguished judicial witness did is extremely important; in meeting this Committee under your guidance to begin this evaluation of the relationship between the incredible outpouring of technology and the fact that our laws sometimes are not keeping up with it. In addition, we have the problem of not being able to anticipate what new technology is coming out in the first place, so it is a sort of built-in problem. Do we try to process the congressional role in the normal way, or do we try to anticipate what is going to happen But I think the basic thing that Judge Smith has pointed out and that reinforces the importance of this hearing is that the courts are in disarray themselves, and understandably so. We have been looking at the 1986 law, and essentially it was created to govern law enforcement access to electronic and wire communications. It created different standards, some that are very high - what is a super warrant, anyway, for wiretapping - and some that are very low. What is a subpoena for telephone toll records And so this law, written before the technology existed, has understandable problems. But it is to the credit of this Committee that we have embarked on this discussion. This is the second of a series, and it sure won't be the last. And it is in this spirit that I commend all five of you distinguished witnesses, experts, in coming here to help...
